PRISON FOR MAJOR MONEY LAUNDERERS

One of Scotland's major gangland figures has been jailed for more than 12 years for his part in a massive money laundering operation.

James Stevenson, 41, also known as "The Iceman", used cash from drugs to buy luxury watches and set up a taxi firm.

His stepson, Gerry Carbin, 26, has been jailed for five years and six months for his part in the scheme.

Stevenson's sentence was believed to be the longest ever imposed in Scotland for money laundering.

At the High Court in Glasgow last month, Stevenson and Carbin admitted a series of charges relating to concealing and receiving criminal property.
